The event aroused wide interest, as the small daughter of the Carusos, little Gloria, was made the first patroness of the affair, and although on account of her age she was sound asleep in her own bed in the Caruso suite fin the hotel when the guests began to assemble there was a picture of her small ladyship on the covers of the programme.

the hotel when the guests began to assemble there was a picture of her small ladyship on the covers of the programme to console her admirers.

Mr. Caruso with Mrs. Caruso, the tenor's brother, Giovanni, and Bruno Zirato, the faithful secretary, looked into the ballroom at 8 o'clock before any of the dancers had arrived. It was against his physician's orders that the singer did even that. He stayed there only a few minutes. He admired the decorations, looked at the handsomely appointed box set apart for him, said he wished he could stay, that he was filled with emotion and then went back to his apartment. It was said the Caruso check for the benefit was about $1,000 and that the total receipts were $5,000.

The ballroom was decorated with American and Italian flags, gay streamers and bannerots, and there was a special committee for the saie of flowers headed by Miss Marie Frugone, who was dressed as an Italian gypsy. Assisting her, also in such costumes, were Mrs. John Adams Drake, Mrs. Arthur Cairone, Mrs. Frank A. Zunlo, Mrs. Joseph Barone, Mrs. E. Paul Yaselij.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel S. Riker have rented the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher Harper in Millbrook, N. Y. Great Pageant Has Climax in Reading of Poem 'In Flanders Fields.'

Cept. Paul G. Thebaud took a party of friends to Forest Lake Club, Pike county, Pa., yesterday for a week's fishing. There were few dry eyes among ten thousand persons who filled the great armory of the Twenty-second Regiment at 168th street and Fort Washington avenue last night when Miss Julia Arthur, clad in classic raiment, emerged from the gloom of the extreme rear of the darkened interior and, as "The Volce of Fallen Herces," spoke the closing lines of John McRae's now historic war poem, "In Flanders Fields": "If ye heak faith with us who die Mr. and Mrs. Williams Burden are of and the Adriatic, due from Europe to Miss Ruth Vanderbilt Twombly will have another large party of friends at Florham, Convent, N. That episode marked the dramatic climax of an impressive memorial festival and pageant, written and directed by Miss Isabel Lowden, sister of former Gov. Lowden of Illinois, and given under the auspices of the memorial festival committee and in cooperation with the school children of this city and the American Legion as a tribute to the heroic dead.

The pageant formed the last half of a programme that was prefaced by addresses by Gov. Henry J. Allen of Kansas and Father Francis P. Duffy; military music by the Keith's Boy Band; orchestral music directed by George H. Gartlan, director of music in the public schools, and by inspiring choral singing by more than 2,000 school children.

To make complete the pageant a patriotic impulse had made a perfect system out of a score or more of different elements in local civic life, culminating in the donation of more than a thousand yards of artifical popples for the decorations from the school children and a ton of flowers for the pageant from members of the Florists Club of New York. quent tribute to the heroism of the men he served with in France. The applause of the audience with the first appearance kept him waiting five minutes before he could start his address. He said: "The noblest of the men responded when the call went out, for they felt their lives should be flung away, if need be, for some ideal of love, patriotism or re-ligion. They cannot die. They will live in the memory of the people as long as the sun shall shine and American ideals shall be maintained."

Gov. Allen, who spent two years it France in field service with the Red Cross, devoted most of his address to telling of his more amusing experiences during the war. He opened his address with the remark: "As I look about me from this gigantic chorus of school children to the great crowd in front of me I am convinced that here is the United States in New York." He said that of all the sounds of war that most deeply impressed upon his memory was the States in New York." He said that of all the sounds of war that most deeply impressed upon his memory was the "sound of the tramping of American feet over the highways of France." His answer to the question of why we went into the war was: "America went in for the salvation of her kin." He paid a tribute to the American Legion and added: "With the Legion we must stand for real Americanism in the United States."

The excellent ensemble singing by the school children under Mr. Gartian was a striking feature of the festival. They were called upon to sing seven numbers, including Mendelszohn's "O, Rest in the Legion and Markon Square Theatre."
